Workshops and Briefing Sessions

This year the group sessions will comprise eight workshops and ten briefing sessions running concurrently on Monday afternoon, and repeated on Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday morning. Delegates can attend a different workshop or briefing session on each of the three days and are requested to indicate their preferences on the Delegate Booking Form. As the workshops will be generally practical and participative in nature, attendance will be limited to 20. Briefing sessions will be more akin to lectures, allowing larger numbers to be accommodated, although delegates will still have the opportunity for questions and discussion. (W = workshop, BS = briefing session)

|--|---|
| 1. (W) Procuring the resources to establish a National Knowledge Service for health and social care
Peter Baker
East Midlands Workforce Development Confederation | How can we ensure equity of access to knowledge and information resources for all health and social care staff? Who are the partners in the service and how can they ensure they procure the right content as well as getting best value? How can the service develop across sectors and what are the barriers to these developments? |
| 2. (W) Promoting e-journals
Melvin Morbey
University of Reading | This workshop will both explore a range of possible ways to promote e-journals and act as an exchange of information on those methods of promotion that participants have found most successful. |
| 3. (W) Moving from print to electronic journals – strategies and structures
Simon Bevan
Cranfield University | The workshop will encourage the sharing of information and opinions on the strategies involved in moving from a paper-based to an electronic-based journal service, as well as looking at the internal structures required to manage such a change. |
| 4. (W) Remote access to e-journals
Judy Thomas
Open University | Theoretically web technologies should enable remote users to have easy access to a library's electronic journal holdings. In reality this is not the case. Libraries are faced with complex authentication, licensing and interface issues. This workshop is intended both for those just beginning to think about tackling these problems and for those already implementing solutions. It will provide a forum for the exchange of experiences, ideas and solutions. |
| 5. (BS) SFX linking
Jenny Walker
Ex Libris (USA) Inc | This briefing session will review the significant progress made in the last year towards an open linking environment for libraries. The widespread adoption by information providers of the OpenURL standard, and the availability of link servers such as SFX, are enabling libraries to take control of their linking environments. |
| 6. (BS) Welcome to the future(s): an introduction to scenario planning
Antony Brewerton
Oxford Brookes University Library | Scenario planning is an exciting and powerful management tool that can help us all to deal with an uncertain future. This briefing session will consider the benefits of a scenario approach and the planning processes involved, as well as exploring opportunities for using scenarios in the work environment. |

7. (W) Space and learning: designs for knowledge sharing
Sarah Godowski
Bisset Adams Ltd
- This workshop will explore how the design of space and the communication of brand identity can be used to turn people on to learning, its application in the public realm, and its implications for the significance of libraries in local regeneration schemes.
8. (BS) E-journal management and control systems: the way forward or a road to nowhere?
Frances Boyle
University of Oxford
- In the past year a growing number of products have become available on the market branded as 'e-journal management and control systems'. This workshop will look at some of the market leaders and, through the collective experience of participants, discuss some of the emerging issues.
9. (W) Disability awareness and accessibility for the visually impaired
Kevin Carey
humanITy
- Accessible information is a matter of civil rights, not social policy. This workshop will explore accessibility issues, including those relating to journals in all their forms, for example, the possibility of an exception in copyright for the benefit of blind and visually impaired people. humanITy, the world's first digital charity, was established in 1997 to draw attention to the problem of social exclusion caused by the increased use of information technology and is an adviser to the UK Government Cabinet Office, the DTI, the Department for Education and Skills, Re:source and the European Commission's e-Europe Initiative.
10. (BS) MAGiC: shining a new light on a grey area
Paul A S Needham
Cranfield University
- MAGiC is a broad-ranging, cross-sectoral research project examining issues surrounding the use, value and accessibility of engineering technical reports - grey literature - in the UK. A key element of the project is the development of a web-based demonstrator service incorporating the foundations of a National Reports Catalogue. Emerging developments, like the Open Archives Initiative, open up the possibility of future collaboration and information exchange, both in the UK and internationally.
11. (BS) E-procurement in partnership
Tony Oliver
University of Salford
Debbie Dore
Swets Blackwell Ltd
- In these ferociously cost-competitive days anything that can save an organisation money is bound to make executives sit up and take notice. E-procurement holds just such a promise with the potential for organisations to reduce transaction processing costs and improve the efficiency of their trading relationships. However, the key to successful e-procurement is partnership and collaboration leading to shared benefits. This session will examine how partnerships can be developed to make the most of e-procurement in the UK Higher Education sector.
12. (BS) Emerging standards for libraries and publishers
Cliff Morgan
John Wiley & Sons Ltd
- This session will cover various emerging standards that are of interest to both publishers and librarians, especially in the field of identifiers, metadata, e-books and linking. Cliff will discuss the status and relevance of each standard and give his view on which ones to back.

13. (W) Mechanisms for communicating between publishers and librarians
Ian Bannerman
Blackwell Publishing
- Publishers need to communicate more information to librarians than ever before. Content moves from publisher to publisher; prices change and online access policies change; new services are launched and existing services enhanced; URLs may change and websites may shut down for maintenance ...
Subscription agents continue to play a role in improving communication but there are now new routes and more direct contact between librarians and publishers. The proliferation of listservs, for example, provides an opportunity to communicate very quickly and very publicly. In this workshop publishers, agents and librarians will discuss what librarians need to hear from publishers, and when and how they want to hear it.
14. (BS) Building communities with access management systems
(Monday and Tuesday only)
Ed Zedlewski
EduServ
- Managing end user access to online services is crucial to cost-effective and timely delivery of content. AMS services, such as Athens, build communities and enhance the user experience when they are used to deliver a holistic solution to authentication and authorisation. This briefing session identifies publishers and librarians as the key stakeholders in the development of current and future AMS services.
15. (BS) Newcomers to serials
Jayne Everard
Staffordshire University
Graham Stone
Bolton Institute
- This briefing session will look at the issues facing the librarian who is new to managing serials in the academic library. It will cover the administration and management of both print and e-journals and will consider the particular challenges associated with the hybrid nature of such a role.
16. (W) Techniques for storytelling as a practical tool
Mark Field and Lyndsay Rees-Jones
The Library Association/CILIP
- Storytelling is something that happens when you are young – isn't it? So what relevance does it have in the corporate world? Stories can convey values and important ideas, teach lessons and bring plans and mission statements to life in a way that normal management techniques cannot. It is a valuable addition to our professional toolkit.
17. (BS) Tips and tricks for sourcing resources on the web and more effective internet searching
(Monday and Tuesday only)
Paul Pedley
Economist Intelligence Unit
- The session will cover sites on the web for newspapers, journals, bibliographic databases and library catalogues, and it will also look at some of the best techniques for effective internet searching for such resources. Discover what is meant by 'flip searching' or 'x-raying'; how to use shop-bots to find the cheapest place to purchase a particular book; how to delve into the 'invisible web'; or how to find out which websites are registered to a particular company or supplier. There will be an opportunity to share information about some of the sites that you find most useful in your work, or the search techniques that you find helpful, so please come prepared with information that you can share with the other briefing session participants.
18. (BS) Modernising document delivery
Richard Thurlow
The British Library
- Changes at the British Library over the last two years have been extensive. The BL is now working to bring added value to customers by matching service delivery more closely to their priorities and requirements. How? By looking at what the BL as a whole can offer to all research sectors and by using its people, processes and systems in a more integrated way. This session will look at what the BL has done or is doing to harness that expertise and also what impacts it needs to take account of, both in the environment and the market place, in order to provide the document delivery service of the future.
